The Drought Jg Ballard

J G Ballard was one of those authors. I have read three of his, The Wind From Nowhere, The Drowned World, and now The Drought. All were classified as science fiction in the 1960s but these days would be practically contemporary fiction. The Drought was originally titled The Burning World when first published in 1964.

A Review: The Drought by J.G.Ballard. I had this novel, The Drought, by J.G.Ballard, on my desk for some time now and had read half and then left it for a month; as to why, I have no idea - just that other things more paramount to me came along and took up my attention. As often things in life do. This was my sixth Ballard work.

Review - "The Drought" - J G Ballard | WordandLightSmithing

I am definitely a fan of JG Ballard, but this, the second of the dystopian 'World' series (the first being 'The Drowned World' and the third being 'The Crystal World'), is not a favourite of mine. I would only recommend it to someone familiar with his work. There is an uncharacteristic awkwardness to his writing in 'The Drought'.
